Geoff Nelson: Thank you all for letting me do this for you. Our theme was collaboration. In the image, I included the three main stakeholders: clinicians, families and researchers. They are making soup together. I had the idea to write out the research questions on the soup containers, but then I shortened them to the “I” element of the PICO once I realized that writing the questions would be like copying the Bible. Laughter.

The clinicians are the medium of change, so they are pouring in the water. The individuals are adding the potatoes because they are the substance. We would not be here without them. Finally, the researchers are adding the spices, because they determine what to do with the data and where to go next. That is the essence of the image in relation to your work. Again, thank you all for allowing me to do this with you.